bright idea

No summertime camping adventure would be complete without a LightCap from SolLight. A water bottle that also functions as a solar-powered lantern, the LightCap charges while you're fishing, hiking or whatever it is you like to do in the open air of the wilderness — no judgment! Afterwards, you can use it as a light source for up to eight hours on a single charge. The cap features a waterproof solar panel and a long-lasting LED light that changes from white to red with the flick of a switch. Get one and you'll never be left in the dark again. Available at SolLight.com. — Kiki Kruz
